

Don't Tell Me ... Organized Mess, Right?

Now here's something you don't see driving down the street every day (thank goodness.) This guy was delivering scrap at a junk yard. Although it looks to me like he has his own little junk yard forming in the back of his truck. What a mess!

I imagine a drive behind this guy on a bumpy road would go something like this: Thump ... splash. There goes a container of gasoline. Thump ... boom. There goes a compressed gas cylinder. Thump ... crash. There goes the kitchen sink. Thump ... thump. "Grandma, you still back there?"

Gimme a break. How much common sense does it take to know that a mess like this is just plain dangerous? Folks, it's easy to accumulate clutter in workshop corners, truck beds, and sheds. Check yourself occasionally to make sure that your clutter isn't an unstable disaster waiting to happen ... and if it is, straighten it up before someone gets hurt.
